There are unmistakable signs that kombucha has evolved from being a specialty item among an extreme subsegment of foodies on the West Coast to a segment of broad interest even transcending the natural-foods channel. Although there are a handful of pasteurized-kombucha players, the segment is dominated by so-called “raw,” unfiltered kombucha that must be kept refrigerated and otherwise handled carefully.

- What exactly is kombucha? It has been called a mushroom tea, but a more accurate description is that it is a sweetened tea to which a kombucha culture has been added. The kombucha culture consists of a symbiosis of bacteria and yeasts. (The culture resembles a pancake or mushroom; hence the term mushroom tea.)

- The brew is allowed to ferment, which produces a vinegary taste (indeed kombucha production is not dissimilar to that of vinegar) that is challenging to a palate trained on sugary soft drinks. Health attributes attributed to kombucha include detoxification and immune-enhancing properties, which may explain why the segment had grown to more than $[x] million by year-end 2014.

- Although the company maintains a secretive approach, many industry players estimated that Millennium Products Inc., with its G.T.’s Synergy and Organic Raw Kombucha items, has easily broken the $[x] million mark in annual sales.

- Being that it is fermented, commercial kombucha should contain up to 0.5% alcohol by volume (ABV). However, in early 2010, investigators from the Maine government conducted tests of unpasteurized, or raw, kombucha in a Portland-area Whole Foods Market and found many that surpassed the 0.5% ABV limit for non-alcoholic drinks. It referred the case to the U.S. Treasury’s Alcohol and Tobacco Tax and Trade Bureau (TTB), which underwent its own investigation.

- In light of the governmental concerns, in June 2010, Whole Foods Market declared that it would pull raw kombucha off its shelves and asked all raw kombucha suppliers to submit third-party verification that their products do not exceed the 0.5% limit. Whole Foods’ principal distributor United Natural Foods, Inc. (UNFI) and raw kombucha manufacturers like Millennium Products agreed to a voluntary recall of their products pending such third-party verification.

- Several companies chose to reformulate their kombucha to minimize the risk of alcohol fermentation and products started to return to store shelves in the summer and fall.
